The tactical axe, a modern version of the tomahawk, is a practical tool, even essential for outdoor activities such as survivalism or bushcraft. Composed of a handle with a grip, a head and a blade (usually single-edged), it proves to be both a practical tool for cutting wood but also an effective throwing weapon.

A tactical ax must meet certain characteristics in order to be effective. It must be manageable (light but not too much).

Due to the fact that it undergoes extreme shocks, the blade must be fashioned in a very resistant stainless steel.

Finally, do not hesitate to use a kydex sheath to store and transport your axe. Wear on the belt, so you can keep your hands free.
