A setup designed for dynamic gameplay

In the field, this configuration immediately inspires confidence. The platform combines a long 14-inch M-LOK handguard with a particularly rigid one-piece outer barrel. The result: excellent stability during rapid transitions and a comfortable grip, even with accessories mounted on the M-LOK interfaces.

The monolithic Picatinny top rail allows the installation of airsoft optics , a magnifier or additional mechanical sights depending on the desired style of play.

Full metal body and premium finish

The Lancer Tactical MGC4 MK2 features a full metal construction, offering a realistic feel that is particularly appreciated both in gameplay and handling. The specific Mayo Gang markings reinforce its visual identity, while the black finish maintains a sleek and tactical look.

The adjustable Delta stock improves shoulder comfort and facilitates access to the battery. In practice, this detail saves valuable time between gaming sessions.

Enhanced internal performance

This AEG replica features internal components designed for excellent durability and a fast trigger response. The 25K high-torque motor ensures a high rate of fire while maintaining good responsiveness.

The Zion Arms Nebula programmable MOSFET improves electrical management and contributes to a smoother, more consistent firing feel. Combined with low-resistance wiring, this optimizes the overall performance of the gearbox.

The 6.03 mm Tight Bore inner barrel promotes consistent firing and improves accuracy at medium range, a point particularly appreciated during cover phases or semi-automatic engagement.

A scalable and customizable platform

The M-LOK handguard allows for the addition of numerous accessories: tactical grip, flashlight, laser, or sling mount. This modularity makes it easy to adapt the replica to different play styles, from CQB to outdoor scenarios.
